HONGKONG, JUNE 10th, 1877.

In another column will be found the continuation of Mr. DAVENPORT's highly interesting report on the trading capacities of the country traversed by the Yunnan Mission. Tai-fu and the other towns of Yunnan were all found to be more or less in a condition of decay and moribund as compared to have displayed any great tendency towards recovery from the depression into which the rebellion threw it. The desolation of this once flourishing province is strongly portrayed by the British Commissioner. "Where once eight millions of industrious people worked and traded, only one million are now scattered amongst the half ruined cities, towns, and villages, and they are nearly all suffering from great poverty. From the description given of the country, it would appear to be richer in resources than perhaps any other province of China, and to be suffering simply from the sparsity of population, a want the other portions of the Empire can so well afford to redress. Mr. DAVENPORT points out that the south of the province, which is reported to be the richest, was left uninhabited by the Mission. According to French and Chinese reports, gold, silver, lead, iron, tin, zinc, and copper are all to be met with in the province, while jade-stone and amber are to be found north of Momein, and many kinds of precious stones, including sapphires, lapis-lazuli, turquoise, agates, &c. In the south. With regard to the copper mines, which are undoubtedly the greatest sources of wealth, most of which have been closed for the past century and a half, Mr. DAVENPORT is of opinion that no information of any value can be obtained on the subject short of a visit to the mines themselves by a competent mineralogist. The authorities are averse to the opening of these rich stores of treasure, and by their irritating conduct on the question drove the Mahomedans into the recent insurrection, which was repressed in such a barbarous and sanguinary manner.

Apart, however, from the mineral resources of Yunnan, it would seem that by industrious cultivation the province might be made to yield many valuable productions of great value. The land at present under cultivation does not exceed more than one-twentieth of the area of the province, and the system employed, owing to the scarcity of manure and the difficulty of keeping down weeds, is not very successful. The chief crop is, as we mentioned the other day, opium, which is raised on account of the facility with which it can be cultivated, and the remunerative rate of which it sells. Yunnan opium is, Mr. DAVENPORT says, considered superior to that grown in Szechuen, and consequently must be the best produced in China. But though opium is now the most important vegetable product of the province it is not by any means the only one. For a most superior quality is grown in the south, and there is no reason why the quantity should not be largely augmented. Mr. DAVENPORT tested this and pronounced it to be of quite a delicate flavour. Tobacco is also produced in sufficient quantity to meet the consumption of the inhabitants, and was "highly appreciated by the Mission." At one time, too, a large trade was done with Burmah in yellow silk, which was the product of Yunnan silkworms, and the rebellion, says Mr. DAVENPORT, "it was a well-known silk-producing country; the department of Yunnan-fu being famous for its satin, while silk was likewise produced in the departments of Yung-chang, Yuen-kiang, Lin-gan, Shun-ling, Li-kiang, and King-tung." Unfortunately the mulberry trees were destroyed by the Chinese troops during the late civil war, nothing has yet been done to replace them, and it will, therefore, take some years to revive the industry. Mr. DAVENPORT is, however, without hope that it may be resuscitated, in the first place because the Chinese, "although unable to derive any improvement in any branch of industry, or to develop the resources of their own rich country, yet are, in most instances, able to resume an industry which has once carried on."

In reckoning the probable dimensions to which the trade of Yunnan may be brought, Mr. DAVENPORT takes what appears to us a very moderate estimate. He says that Captain Cooke computes the total value of the present trade of the province at about a million sterling. Taking into consideration its mineral resources and natural productions, the Commissioner believes that this trade could soon be raised to three million pounds a year. He does not fail to show, however, that it would be necessary to cheapen the scale of freight on the Irrawaddy, and take from the natives of Burmah and China their exclusive monopoly of the traffic. As illustrating the certainty of such an increase following the opening up of the province to British trade, he calls attention to the fact that the total value of the trade of Newchang, the port of a country lamentably deficient in most of the sources of wealth which abound in Yunnan, was in 1874 a million and a half sterling, or six times that between China and Burmah including both roads. There is every reason to hope, therefore, that the trade through Yunnan may, if properly fostered, prove very satisfactory. Not only will British merchants be practically without European competitors on the route, but they will—unless the native authorities show intentional obstacles in the path—also be able to develop many industries, and help to restore the departed prosperity of the province. If this should turn out to be the case, their poor Mahagay will not have perished in vain, nor will the long journey of the Yunnan Commissioners have proved wholly fruitless.

We are requested to announce that the Band of the 29th Regiment will play in the Public Gardens on Saturday evening next, commencing at nine o'clock p.m.

The Agents of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company have received a telegram stating that the steamer City of Tokio was to leave Yokohama this morning for Hongkong.

As will be observed, from the English telegrams elsewhere published, the Tuxes are gaining the advantage at present over the Russians on the Asiatic, where it was believed they would be most likely to meet with reverse. It is probable, however, that these successes will give a temporary character only, as the Russian troops in Armenia will not doubt be largely reinforced very shortly.

The band of Her Majesty's 25th Regiment will perform the following programme this evening—

1. "The March." 2. "The British Grenadiers." 3. "The British Band." 4. "The British Band." 5. "The British Band." 6. "The British Band." 7. "The British Band." 8. "The British Band." 9.
